► IMPORTANT OUTERWEAR RATINGS AND FEATURES

CHOOSE THE RIGHT OUTERWEAR FOR YOUR OUTDOOR ENDEAVORS

WATER RESISTANCE • The ability of a garment to prevent water leakage. Measured by the amount of water in millimeters (mm) which can rest on the fabric before it seeps through, with a higher number meaning more water resistance.

BREATHABILITY • The ability of a garment to allow water vapor to escape from within. Measured in g/m² – the higher this rating, the more breathable the fabric, which is better for high-energy, long term excursions.

WATERPROOF-BREATHABLE MEMBRANE • A layer within the fabric of some outerwear which prevents water droplets from passing through from the outside, but allows water vapor to escape from within.

DWR FINISH • A Durable Water Repellent finish on the face fabric of a piece of outerwear helps water bead up and roll off the surface without saturating it.

SEAM SEALING/TAPING • Seams in outerwear can be sealed to prevent leakage. “Critically taped” means it has been sealed at the neck, shoulders and chest, while “fully taped” garments have every seam sealed.

INSULATION • Insulation is the key to keeping warm in cold conditions. Down insulation is lighter, more compressible and longer-lasting, while synthetic insulation is heavier, but less expensive and insulates better when wet.
