► IMPORTANT OUTERWEAR RATINGS AND FEATURES
CHOOSE THE RIGHT OUTERWEAR FOR YOUR OUTDOOR ENDEAVORS

WATER RESISTANCE • The ability of a garment to prevent water leakage. Measured by the amount of water in millimeters (mm) which can rest on the fabric before it seeps through, with a higher number meaning more water resistance.

BREATHABILITY • The ability of a garment to allow water vapor to escape from within. Measured in g/m² – the higher this rating, the more breathable the fabric, which is better for high-energy, long term excursions.

WATERPROOF-BREATHABLE MEMBRANE • A layer within the fabric of some outerwear which prevents water droplets from passing through from the outside, but allows water vapor to escape from within.

DWR FINISH • A Durable Water Repellent finish on the face fabric of a piece of outerwear helps water bead up and roll off the surface without saturating it.

SEAM SEALING/TAPING • Seams in outerwear can be sealed to prevent leakage. “Critically taped” means it has been sealed at the neck, shoulders and chest, while “fully taped” garments have every seam sealed.

INSULATION • Insulation is the key to keeping warm in cold conditions. Down insulation is lighter, more compressible and longer-lasting, while synthetic insulation is heavier, but less expensive and insulates better when wet. The North Face® outerwear with ThermoBall™ insulation offers a lightweight, streamlined, highly compressible synthetic alternative.

DRYVENT™ • The North Face® DryVent™ fabrics are engineered to be fully waterproof, windproof, and breathable. The multi-layered face fabric is treated with a DWR finish and fully seam-sealed, in a variety of fabric weights and textures providing maximum protection and performance.

WINDWALL® • WindWall® fabrics are engineered to greatly reduce the effects of wind chill while remaining flexible and breathable. This fabric can be used in The North Face® soft shells, outer shells and fleece outerwear products.
